Legislative Council Interim Committee
Community Colleges and Postsecondary Professional-Technical Education
2006

FINAL REPORT

Charge

The Postsecondary Professional-Technical and Academic Education in Idaho Interim Committee, referred to as the Community Colleges Interim Committee, was created by the Legislative Council pursuant to the provisions of Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 132, 2006. The resolution directed the committee to assess the role and mission of postsecondary professional-technical and academic education in Idaho, and to request information from representatives of both public and private partnerships, educational institutions, the Office of the State Board of Education, members of the business community and other interested persons or organizations. The committee was also directed to make recommendations as necessary for changes to existing statutes regarding such postsecondary issues as the role, mission, funding, governance and academic programs of community colleges and the burdens placed on community college taxing districts and professional-technical programs. The resolution further required the committee to report its findings, recommendations and proposed legislation, if any, to the First Regular Session of the Fifty-ninth Idaho Legislature.

Membership

The eighteen-member committee was comprised of nine senators and nine representatives: Senator John Goedde (Co-chair), Representative Darrell Bolz (Co-chair), Senator Dean Cameron, Senator John Andreason, Senator Joe Stegner, Senator Bart Davis, Senator Patti Anne Lodge, Senator Brad Little, Senator David Langhorst, Senator Edgar Malepeai, Representative Jim Clark, Representative Julie Ellsworth, Representative Leon Smith, Representative Larry Bradford, Representative Ann Rydalch, Representative Marge Chadderdon, Representative Donna Boe and Representative John Rusche.

Idaho's Community Colleges

Idaho has two community colleges, North Idaho College in Coeur d'Alene and College of Southern Idaho in Twin Falls, created pursuant to Chapter 21, Title 33, Idaho Code. Community college districts are authorized to levy a property tax up to a maximum of .16% of market value for assessment purposes and to charge tuition and fees. Both community colleges also receive an appropriation from the state general fund, distributions from the state liquor fund and other non-appropriated funds including federal grants and contracts. Both NIC and CSI continue to establish additional outreach centers for delivery of education at off-campus sites. Electors of a community college district elect their own five-member board of trustees who each serve a term of six years. Testimony and supporting studies indicate that community colleges provide a significant economic benefit to the local economy, and that the responsiveness of the local boards of trustees to the business community for workforce training is a critical factor in the colleges' positive impact on the community.

Public Professional-Technical Education and Postsecondary Academic Education

Eastern Idaho Technical College in Idaho Falls is the sole stand-alone public technical college in Idaho; it is supported entirely by appropriation from the state general fund. In accordance with State Board of Education policy, the four-year public institutions of Lewis-Clark State College, Boise State University and Idaho State University provide selected professional-technical programs and offer lower division academic courses that can lead to an associate's degree. Such programs are referred to as embedded community college functions and are available at rates commensurate with the cost of education at any Idaho public four-year postsecondary educational institution.

North Idaho College and College of Southern Idaho also offer professional-technical programs funded by the state.

Treasure Valley Community College, an Oregon public community college, offers courses in Idaho and is continuing to expand its programs in both lower division academic and professional-technical education.

Private Professional-Technical Education and Postsecondary Academic Education

In addition to the state's system of public postsecondary and professional-technical education, there are also private institutions that offer courses of instruction leading to certification in a wide variety of technical programs, some of which also provide lower division academic courses for the granting of an associate's degree.

Issues

Committee discussion of community colleges revolved primarily around the issues of governance, accessibility, affordability and funding. Governance requires the need to balance the responsiveness inherent in local control with the control that can come only from the state: coordinating transferability and articulation of credits, and standardizing tuition. Accessibility and affordability were further viewed and distinguished from the perspective of the student as well as that of the state. Funding an expanded state system of community colleges would require additional revenues if the current system is to continue to be supported at current levels. State law allows for the formation of additional community college districts with the authority to raise revenues by levying a property tax, but such an option is less desirable in today's atmosphere of general dissatisfaction with property tax as a revenue source.

Presenters

The committee took testimony from administrators of public and private postsecondary educational institutions and professional-technical colleges, members of the business community and members of local chambers of commerce, private educational organizations, and city and county elected officials. In addition to the presenters, the committee heard from interested members of the general public, who offered their comments and opinions.

Draft Legislation Considered by the Committee

During its October and November meetings, the committee reviewed twenty-one pieces of draft legislation: two drafts on formation of a community college district; three drafts on standardizing tuition to community college or technical college rates; three drafts on income tax credit and property taxes paid to a community college district; four drafts on geographic boundaries and course offerings; three drafts on elections; four drafts on changes to the existing community college system; and two drafts on scholarships.

Findings and Recommendations

Of the fifteen motions placed by the committee during its final meeting, the following received approval. When a roll call vote was taken, the ayes and nays were recorded and are reported with the recommendation.

1. Hold in committee the four drafts under consideration that would create a statewide community college system and that would add community colleges to the state system of postsecondary institutions (Drafts MLI015, MLI036, MLI029 and MLI044).

Moved: Representative Smith
Seconded: Representative Rusche
Carried on a voice vote

2. Recommend two drafts, Draft MLI021 and Draft MLI011 taken together, that reduce the majority required to approve formation of a community college district from a two-thirds majority to a 60% majority, and that require all elections regarding community colleges to be held on one of the four dates established in law.

Moved: Representative Smith
Seconded: Senator Cameron
Passed: 10-7-1

Ayes -- Goedde, Cameron, Andreason, Lodge, Langhorst, Bolz, Smith, Bradford, Chadderdon, Rusche

Nays -- Stegner, Davis, Little, Malepeai, Clark, Rydalch, Boe

Absent and excused -- Ellsworth

3. Recommend that the state adopt a policy that moves toward standardizing tuition costs and fees for professional-technical courses. The State Board of Education and the presidents of the colleges and universities are invited to submit recommendations to the Legislature describing how they would implement this policy over time.

6. Recommend establishing by law a procedure for dissolving a community college district, based on Draft MLI028. Add an additional provision that provides a continuing revenue source until all debt and lawful claims against the dissolved district are discharged, if the proceeds from sale and disposition of community college properties and assets are insufficient to discharge all such debt or claims.

Moved: Senator Davis

Seconded: Representative Bolz
